

The Queensland Journal of Military History, published annually by the Queensland Military Historical Society, encourages articles dealing with the following broad themes and topics. These should not, however, be considered as exhaustive. All submissions will be assessed at the discretion of the Editor and the Society's Research Sub-Committee (if required).

- 1. Queensland's military history from 1824 to the present
 - (i) The British Army presence to 1869;
 - (ii) Queensland volunteer and militia force, 1860-1901;
 - (iii) Queensland's role in Commonwealth forces in war and peace; and
 - (iv) Memoirs and life-writing by current and former services personnel with a connection to Queensland.

- 2. The QMHS museum, library and archives collections
 - (i) Identification, assessment and interpretation of items in the QMHS collection.

- 3. Military sites and places in Queensland
 - (i) Establishment and maintenance of Queensland's defence infrastructure;
 - (ii) Sites and features associated with key military establishments; and
 - (iii) Documentation of civilian sites associated with military activities and events.

- 4. Commemorative events and anniversaries
 - (i) Acknowledgment of events of international, national and state significance.

While the journal is oriented towards evidence-based historical research, undertaken to high standards of analytical rigour, written expression, and clarity, articles should be written with general rather than specialist readers in mind.

Our refereeing policy requires peer-reviewed reports on all manuscripts. The Editor is responsible for the acceptance of articles but should supply legitimate reasons for acceptance or rejection.

The opinions expressed in articles published and the accuracy of any statements contained in the same are solely the responsibility of the individual authors, who retain copyright to their original work when published in the journal. The Editor disclaims responsibility for statements, either of fact or opinion, made by the contributors. The Editor retains the right to condense articles and reviews, to make minor grammatical amendments and determine titles in consultation with authors.

Recommended word length is 5-6,000 words, not including references (endnotes), with a proposed title and author details on the front page. Final acceptance of articles for publication is conditional upon full compliance with the QJMH house style (see www.qmhs.com.au).

Contributors

Robin Franklin (born in Brisbane, 1947) is married with three children. He graduated from the Officer Cadet School, Portsea in June 1968 and served as a second lieutenant with the 2nd Battalion, Royal Australian Regiment in Vietnam in 1970-71. Following his military service, he completed a BA (Humanities) in 1979 (Griffith University) and LLB (QUT) in 2000, and has practiced employment law since that time. He is currently completing an MPhil in the School of Historical and Philosophical Inquiry at the University of Queensland. robin@faclaw.com.au

Geoff Ginn is an historian at the University of Queensland, presently convenor of the History program and a specialist in British, colonial and urban history. He is active in the public history arena, and has been involved with the Queensland Museum as a board member since 2008. g.ginn@uq.edu.au

Darryl Low Choy is Emeritus Professor of Environmental and Landscape Planning, Griffith University, and formerly Head of Urban and Environmental Planning at that university. Formerly Major General in the Australian Army Reserve, he has researched and published widely in the fields of planning, environmental studies and military history. d.lowchoy@griffith.edu.au

Brian Rough is a Brisbane-based author, public historian and consultant, formerly of the Brisbane City Council Heritage Unit. He has particular interests in Queensland's military and policing history and aspects of colonial society. A winner of the Lord Mayor's Helen Taylor Research Award for Local History (2020), his recent publications include 'A Most Promising Corps': Citizen Soldiers in Colonial Queensland, 1860-1903 (2010) and Capturing Brisbane: the City's first photographers (2022). bgrough@gmail.com

Roger Sak was born in Brisbane in 1959 and is married with two children, one in the Australian Army and one formerly in the Royal Australian Navy. He has a keen interest in Australian military history, largely due to his grandfather Ernie Meyers and the family's collection of his service and personal memorabilia.

Naomi Simpson was born in 2001 and is an undergraduate History student at the University of Queensland. She is interested in military history, as well as the history of the Solomon Islands as a result of family connections there, and plans to undertake further history studies. n.simpson@uq.net.au

Amanda Wildie graduated from the Brisbane College of Advanced Education as a Business and English teacher in 1986, and now teaches at Glenala State High School. Born in Mosgiel, New Zealand, in 1966 she is married with two children. Her recent interest in military history has resulted in a prize-winning artwork depicting the names of Australians who died in the 1915 conflict at Gallipoli, and a contribution to the 'First Ashore' Lecture Series for the 9th Battalion Association. mandywildie@gmail.com
